Trivel on the Norwich horse railroad for years ago this week, the road having begun business a half century ago this mouth, was on the increase, and the road efficials found it necessary to run two extra cars on the line to accommodate the cruewis. Interesting extracts from the files of The Eulletin of 1870 are as follows:

Monday, Sept. 19, 1870.—We are informed that A. M. Norcross of this city, a mute from birth has been restored to speech and hearing by the laying on of hands by a female physician. Mr. Norcross as yet can utter only the vowels and a ferial half, and it was conceded to have been the figures bronze, with ample space for ensculptured records. The design will be on exhibition today at one of the stores. We hear there are parties in town contemptating the establishment of small circulating libraries. The closing of the City library is likely to necessitate the formation of private book clubs, circulating libraries and all sorts of devices to meet the wants of those who are desirous of reading the books and periodicals of the day.

A finer display of flowers, fruits and vegetables never was made in our goodly city, and we are confident has never been excelled in the state. A gentleman present yesterday who had been at the New England fair said that the exhibition had surpassed that both in quality and quantity. One Saturday in August I had the rare privilege of taking tea with the poet, Miss Anna Hempstead Branch, of Hempstead street, New London, after some difficulty in reaching my destination. It was wonderful to be in a house that was built in 1647, and to find almost everything the way they left it, those sturdy, dauntless pioneers who sacrificed so much that others through their loss might gain. The atmosphere seemed to breathe of the past and one could not help but reflect as we sat before the open fireplace of what has gone before and the inspiration to go forward to do and dare for righteousness. Partially the history of the place was re-Partially the history of the place was re-hearsed. I even held a small yellow pitcher that is 200 years old in a room

One day we left the "kitchen" and hopped into the car and motored to the Devil's Hopyard. It was a most enjoy-able trip. I didn't have to wait to reach the yard because I kept hopping out all along the route. Beautiful country! Another day at Burke's Corners my

We had the pleasant company of Mrs. Race and Mrs. Rockwood It was good to meet again all the "pen names." Had a fine luncheon, thanks to the kitchenettes. The impromptu program was enjoyed by all.

We also attended the meetings at Mr. Peabody's home and felt inspired and uplifted by Mrs. Wittemore's wonderful Labor day—my last day down on the farm! Oh, that there must be a last day! It surely was a labor day to carry myself back to the city to resume the secretaryship of Labor Temple.

For instance, there is the housewife who keeps the ice in her refrigerator wrapped in newspaper because she says that it does not melt so rapidly this way. that it does not melt so rapidly this way. Another housewife insists that this is wrong, for, although the paper keeps the ice from melting, it also keeps the ice from cooling the rest of the icebox. Both points of view are really right. If you have only a limited amount of ice, which must last possibly till the next day, then it is a good idea to keep it covered with newspapers, placing the milk and butter or whatever else you wish to keep from spoiling close to the ice. However, if you have enough ice and an icebox full of food, it is foolish to cover the ice, for food, it is foolish to cover the ice, for you may spoil your food while you save your ice. Such an illustration applies to many other things connected with housekeeping.

How many of the sisters are fudge How many of the sisters are fudge makers? Sugar, you know, is getting so that common people know what it looks like again, and there are lots of things that can be made of fudge besides just the dark brown squares that take the place of dollar a pound chocolates. For instance, you can delight the members of your family who have a sweet tooth by having some hot fudge on hand next time you have vanilla ice cream and instead of serving chocolate sauce serve fudge. The fudge should not be cooked quite so long as if you were going to turn it out for candy, but almost any simple fudge recipe will answer.

Here is something else that is good:

Here is something else that is good: Have ready plain, unsweeted wrfers, and after the fudge has been boiled and beaten to the point where you usually turn it out on buttered tins, spread half of the wafers with the fudge and then with the other half make sandwiches.
